AFTERWORD

Thank you very much for staying with the story through the third volume. To be honest, I'm not quite sure how I've been able to continue it this long. But please, bear with it just a little longer if at all possible.

With Minano having continued on this long, I can't help feeling the passage of time.

The forest right near my house, where I used to go as a kid to collect beetles, and I saw two white snakes, has disappeared. Now it's become a new housing development, and on dim evenings, the feeling that it was like the forest in Totoro is completely gone.

My home too will be rebuilt, and our yard eliminated, due to a widening of the highway. Now all that's standing in the yard is the tool shed my deceased grandpa used when gardening. Now, while we're waiting for the construction, the empty lot is rife with tall weeds.

But in this early summer, in our former yard, growing even taller than the weeds, some hollyhock have blossomed. My grandma planted those flowers. It's as if they're asserting themselves as the last remaining evidence of the history of our former home. But even this remnant will be paved under by the new road.

Then, in future generations, even the memory that once our home stood here will disappear ...

What!? Grandma!? She's still alive!?

Even though she's not what she used to be, she's almost 100!!

Conclusion:

Women are strong. Very strong.
